1. Non-Functional Requirements

1.1 Usability Requirements

- Notification System: Our app is designed with a notification system that performs by alerting all related users within ~1 second. In addition, a red dot on the notification icon will catch users' attention and help them keep up with the new updates.
- Dashboard System: A dashboard will be implemented for all actors of the Information Office to enable them to view all the event tables with 2 clicks after the login. These tables will be designed in a way that enables users to filter events by date, school, or status.
- Accessing the Tour Summary: The key attributes, such as the date of the tour, number of students, and status of the tour, will be accessed by at most two button clicks.

1.2 Security/Safety Requirements

- Account Creation: The administrative accounts will be auto-generated by the system, and the credentials will be delivered by email. Furthermore, only the coordinator will be able to create accounts for new guides to prevent unauthorized access.
- Limited Scope of Visible Information: The information accessible to each user will be determined by their role in the system. For example, guides will only see essential details about system actors, such as their names, departments, and roles. More sensitive information, like email addresses and student numbers, will be restricted to the coordinator and Head to ensure privacy protection.
- The actors' credentials will be encrypted using a Bcrypt hashing system and saved in the database.

1.3 Performance Requirements

- After a guide assigns their self to a high-school tour, this change must be reflected in the system in less than 10 seconds to prevent collisions.
- All the tour interactions, such as canceling, rejecting, and accepting a tour, will be reflected in the system in less than 10 seconds.
- Page navigation within the app will not exceed 6 seconds.

1.4 Reliability Requirements

- The database structure will be organized by creating different tables for saving high school tours, individual tours, and fairs and include backups that prevent data loss in the system. There will be unique identifiers for each tour. Also, indexes on frequently queried fields should be created to store the tour date and foreign keys of advisor ID and guide ID.

- The system must accommodate approximately 100 concurrent users to guarantee seamless access. Spring boot has @Async annotation to enable asynchronous processing, which will be utilized. By running tasks asynchronously, the system can handle more requests concurrently without getting blocked by tasks.

1.5 Maintainability Requirements:

- MVC (Model-View-Controller) architecture will be implemented to separate the system's components clearly to clarify that each part can function independently. This modular structure will facilitate easier maintenance, testing, and scaling of individual system components.
- The microservice architecture will be implemented to enhance maintainability by allowing each service to be updated and maintained independently without affecting other parts of the system. This isolation will simplify debugging and testing. Moreover, it will enable us to work on different services simultaneously, increasing development efficiency compared to projects with monolithic architectures, which will also make the version control process easier.

2.8: Activity Diagram for User Management

5. State Diagrams

5.1 The State Diagram of a Tour Object

Note: Tour applications and approved tours are both stored in the tour object. The tours can be rejected from the start (by an advisor or Head Secretary), and they can also be canceled by BTO or high schools/individuals. They do not represent the same state. Rejected tours are only visible in the tour applications table, whereas canceled tours can be seen in the tours table and visible to guides and members.

5.2 The State Diagram of a Fair Object

Visual Paradigm Standard (ayca ataci@ilkerit Univ.)

Note: Fair applications and approved fairs are both stored in the fair object. The fairs can be rejected from the start (by the coordinator or Director), and they can also be canceled by BTO or high schools. They do not represent the same state. Rejected fairs are only visible in the fair applications table, whereas canceled fairs can be seen in the fairs table visible to guides and members.

5.3 The State Diagram of a User Object

Visual Paradigm Standard (Jaya et al. (Bikant Univ.))

Note: The guides and guides in training are registered by the coordinator. The login credentials are given to users, they can edit their profile and change their passwords afterward. Users' roles can be changed by the coordinator (from guide in training to guide or from guide to advisor etc.), and there may be new required information for the user's new role (a guide becoming an advisor has to add the day of the week that they are responsible for to their information).
